Forensic psychological services for attorneys and their clients.

Psychological assessment and consultative services after being referred to by your attorney. The role of the psychologist will depend upon the details of your situation and what caused you to become involved with the legal system (criminal charges, child custody, personal injury, etc).

Forensic psychological assessments and consultative services are not "therapy," and you and your psychologist will discuss your needs and circumstances during your first visit. If therapy seems to hold promise for you, you will be offered therapy services -- either through Oyster Point Psychological Practice or via a referral.

Assessment is the collection of data from a variety of sources (interview data, psychological testing, medical records, school records and legal records). The data is interpreted and documentation to support decisions is provided.
