VA Family and Caregiver Resources

VA Caregiver Support

VA has developed a list of family and caregiver resources, including call center information and community support services.

Veteran caregivers face unique challenges with little or no medical and mental health training to support themselves and the Veteran in their care. These challenges can take an emotional, financial and physical toll on Veteran caregivers and their families.

Supporting others while also coping

Family members of Veterans are currently facing two challenges – supporting the Veteran they love, and coping with their own thoughts and feelings. VA has resources and information for both of these challenges, like Coaching into Care, which provides support and resources to families who don't know where to start in supporting the Veteran they love, all the way to VA's Caregiver Support Program that connects caregivers to one another to support each other as peers.

“The most important thing we can do right now is connect. Talk to other families facing similar challenges, even families you haven't reached out to in a while. Suggest that your Veteran reach out to some of their battle buddies. Access one of the many resources available through VA, DOD, or any of our many partners. You are not alone, and you do not need to face any of this alone.”
